Security Dimensions of South Lebanon Situation

An increasing number of attacks on the IDF in southern Lebanon have killed or wounded 5-10 Israelis per week in recent months.

- Most of these attacks are probably by PLO groups; FATAH, DFLP or PFLP-GC.
- Lebanese Shia unhappy with Israeli occupation probably are responsible for some of the attacks in the past month.
- Lebanese leftists allied with the PLO or acting independently may also be involved.

25X1

Syrian and Iranian support for the guerrillas and the existence of a sanctuary in northern Lebanon and the Bekaa Valley facilitate such guerrilla operations. Israel holds the Syrians responsible for permitting Palestinian infiltration and is likely to unleash punitive strikes against Syrian/Palestinian positions in the Bekaa Valley in the near future.

- Punitive actions may discourage but will not stop the attacks.
- A continued Israeli presence in Lebanon, like a magnet, will attract further attacks, with increasing involvement of Lebanese Muslims resentful of the Israeli occupation.

25X1

Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon would reduce or eliminate Lebanese Muslim participation in guerrilla attacks, but PLO fighters would still try to conduct operations against northern Israel.

- The Lebanese Army and civilian intelligence probably could stop most terrorist operations and could prevent the reestablishment of PLO main force units in the southern security zone.
- Major Haddad's forces, familiar with the area, would be invaluable in an anti-terrorist role.

Major Haddad's Role in Maintaining Security

25X1

25X6

Major Haddad himself is, in our view, not essential to maintaining security in southern Lebanon.

The extent of southern Lebanese loyalty to Haddad is questionable.

-- Outside the former Haddad enclave (an area no more than 10 kilometers wide along Israeli's northern border) support for Haddad probably is negligible.

25X1

Potential Reestablishment of a PLO Infrastructure

If the Israeli-Lebanese talks fail or drag on inconclusively the PLO will probably try to augment its forces and infrastructure in the North.

25X1

-- PLO political activities in isolation pose no threat to Lebanon.

25X1

-- The danger lies in the possibility that Lebanese Muslims and leftists will again renew their alliance with a rearmed PLO as leverage to assure continued Muslim participation in the Lebanese political process. This development would ensure a stronger PLO and probably precipitate a new civil war. [redacted]
